One hears so many engagements rumored, discussed, denied and affirmed that really tis well-nigh impossible what to believe raged to somebody, according to her friends.
It is the fashion, however, to deny all such impeachments. I mean, to deny the same if you happen to be one of the in-they swear to you with both hands on the almanac that they are not engaged." de-clared a wise young woman the other day. "In the first place, if you tax the man, he's duty bound to deny it, because Fiancee has made him promise by all that is high and hely that he won't tell until she is ready to give a pink tea and inform her dearest friends.

tingency. Suppose the wedding is not to be until midwinter and the girl is pretty and popular. She knows the minute her en-gagement comes out away goes her fun. The other men are not going to flock as in days gone by—not if they know themselves. She is entirely dependent on Fiance for her good times; and just suppose—harrowing thought—that Fiance is called out of town for two months right in the middle of the season! No theaters; no calls; no flowers; no nice attentions that are meat and drink to any and most all society girls. As-suredly no girl wants her engagement an-nounced if she still expects to hold on to

A man usually likes to get out and shout the giad tidings from the housetops when he's finally won the girl, especially if the winning has been a hard and protracted struggle. And he is generally just selfish enough not to care whether Flancee has any enough not to care whether Flancee has any other attentions but his own. In fact, he prefers not, as a rule.

Usually she wins, however, when it comes to keeping the interesting fact a secret. She always makes just one mistake, however—that of telling her best girl friend or perchance her two best friends. The mistake is halved when she tells two, since the two can confide in each other, and so keep from bursting with knowledge. But if she imparts the news to one girl only, the

While many persons held aloof from the theaters and amusement places last week, I was, nevertheless, surprised at the fash-ionable audience in the Olympio on Monday ionable audience in the Olympio on Monday night. There was some talk late last season concerning the adoption of Tuesday night by the ultra-fashionables; but nothing has appeared to come of it. Society people do like to see a play on the first night that it comes to town-not only St. Louis society, but that of everycity. There is an undeniable charm in witnessing the first production of any play, and there are always those who will go, and there are always those who will go, and the first production of any play, and there are always those who will go, and the first production of any play, and there are always those who will go, and there are always those who will go, even if a few exclusive persons do walt until Tuesday, or perchance Wedneeday.

The Sam Thompsons never neglect a first night. They were down in the parquet on Monday to see "Mrs. Dane," with Miss Somerville next to Mrs. Thompson, and Phill Wilson for the "inside" man. Mrs. Thompson wore a very pretty gown of light sain foulard, large French roses in sprays applied on the upper part of the skirt and the guimpe. They looked like those effective cretonne flowers, but, of course, were not, being probably embroidered in silks.

Miss Jessie Ringen came with a tall, athlette, blond man, wearing her favorite pale gray, this gown being crepe, thickly shirred about the hips and appliqued in

MISS EDITH MARION HALLETT.

Whose engagement to Doctor C. A. Frank has just been announced. Miss Hallett is the daughter of Mrs. F. M. Hallett of No. 353A Windsor place. The wedding probably will take place in about two weeks at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, although all the details for the ceremony have not been completed.

down near the front. Mrs. Nugent wore a white and yellow gown, with curious bell-shaped sleeves. And, by the by, that reminds me, Mr. and Mrs. Nugent and the Thompsons are almost the only persons who follow the continental custom of leaving their seats for a bit of a stretch between acts. They passed out to the foyer every time the curtain fell on Monday; and I noticed that Mr. Nugent found it pleasant to visit several friends whom he spied seated on the aisles. Nothing adds so much seated on the aisles. Nothing adds so much to the sociability of a house as this promenading.
It is most practicable in St. Louis, too, he cause one is sure to meet one's friends because one is sure to meet one's friends every first night. We have no large influx of suburban or transient theater-goers, as in other cities. You have only to step inside the Olympic or Century for five or six consecutive Monday nights in order to become well acquainted with the majority of faces throughout the entire house. The same people are always there faces throughout the entire house. The same people are always there.

For this reason visiting and promenading are highly desirable and decidedly pleasant. In the Olympic much moving about is impossible, since there is practically little or no room in the back of the house. And on a crowded night, even that small space gets packed with "stand-ups." The Century has all the long halls of the building proper for a promenade; only I must admit that they are so dimly lighted as to be far from desirable, and certainly very poor places to show off one's newest frock. The Odeon is, par excellence, the place for sociability between acts, with so much space, well lighted and handsomely appointed. and handsomely appointed.

Miss Marian Fry and handsome Wallace Montague are to wed this fall so I hear.
Their engagement has never been formally announced, though intimate friends have known of it for the last year. Miss Fry was ready to be married by the control of the second to be married by the control of the second to be married by the control of t ready to be married last spring about the same time as her sister, but Mr. Montague was called to Texas for several months on business, and a Texas summer is not the finest climatic change in the world, even for a St. Louis girl. So the autumn was chosen instead, and November probably will be the month.

Here's an exciting bit of news! Silklined trousers for men. No longer are we to have the monopoly of rustling down the aisles, dear girls. Our manly escorts also will rustle, if some new clothes that I heard about the other day, belonging to several smart men of town, are to be taken as silky examples. They won't rustle very much, however; the silk is a very soft and slinky kind, quite thick, too, and warranted to keep the trousers from bagging at the trace. knees. They are said to er go on easier when lined with silk; which by the by, doesn't appear to me to be much of an adbeavy Irish lace. It was highly becoming, as gray always suits women with vivid coloring.

I also saw Mr. and Mrs. Dan Nugent down near the front. Mrs. Nugent wore a white and yellow gown, with curious bell-shaped sleeves. And, by the by, that reminds me, Mr. and Mrs. Nugent and the Thompsons are almost the only persons who follow the continental custom of leavrather pretty as well. Mr. Buechel tells me a touching little story of the President's funeral. On last Mon-day, as soon as the papers announced when and where the funeral would take place, there came into the florist's shop an old darky woman, spectacled and gray, neatly dressed and dignified in manner. "How much will a funeral piller cost, Marse Buechel," she inquired. "Well," replied he, "anywhere from $3 upward. What do you want to pay?"

"Specks as how I cud pay three dollahs," said the old woman, reflectively. "Guess dat just about take all I got, but I wants the fines' piller you can make, an' I wants it sent to Mrs. McKinley down in Canton. An' kin you git it there the day ob the funer!"

funer'l?"

"My husband, he's dead now, but he was Jackson Bowers, an' he knew Major Mc-Kinley 'way back in the war, an' if he'd bin livin' to-day he'd spent his last cent to git his cie Major the fines' piller he could fin'. An' so I wants you to put my name on it jus' right."

The florist promised she should have her pillow, and made up his mind that it should be a handsome one, too, whether the flowers in it were three dollars' worth or ten. So, somewhere in all that wealth of bloom at the Canton home last Thursday was a white pillow made of choicest rosebuds and delicate green, and hanging from it a small and modest card which read:

To Mrs. McKinley.
From Mrs. Lea Bowers, St. Louis, Widow of Jackson Bowers.

A very smart young man whom I know. who is both tall and shapely, came home from New York the other day, sporting a fine and fancy new "raincoat," as he calls it. Cut with the newest loose front and inverted box-pleated back, and made of the finest English cloth, it really is a beauty, and I don't wonder that he swells with pride when he puts it on. Every youth who knows him is envious.

Some of them met at one of the clubs the other night, and were discussing fall clothes in general, when in walked Jack with his new raincoat one.

Of course, they had him on dress parade for a few minutes; turned him round, and loke him over from top to toe. The general consensus of opinion was that Jack's new cost was all that he cracked it up to be. "But will it hold water—that's what I'd like to know," said Tom. And Harry and Ohek wagged their heads and said that was what troubled them, too; and that they felt pretty sure that it wouldn't.

WEDDINGS.

Mrs. Anna Bohne of No. 3847 Windsor place announces the marriage of her daughter, Mattle, to Mr. Homer Lloyd of this city on Thursday, September 19. The ceremony was a culet affair, at 2:30 p. m. in the parior of the bride's home, which was decorated with goldenrod, roses and carnations. The bride and bridegroom were unattended, and only the immediate relatives were present. The Reverend W. J. Williamson, pastor of Third Baptist Church, officiated. A dinner was served after the ceremony.

Mr. Frank Waldron Buckley and Miss Mary Cole were married on September 21 at Guthrie. Ok. Miss Cole has spent several years in St. Louis as the guest of Mr. Buckley's sister.

The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents in Guthrie.

Mr. and Mrs. Buckley will be at home. No. 3881 Cook avenue, Tuesdays after November.
